MESSRS Epicons-Observing in your paper, a statement of a murder, commuted in this Distriet, on the body of Mr. Woodkurs, in parts of which, your information was cromeous, I take the liberty of furnishing you with the true parti culars of that hound transaction.

On the night of the 3d February last, Mr. CALEB WOODRUFF, a respeciable citizen of this District, rode at sunset, to the house of Thomas FARROW, Lisq, his father-in-law, a distance of about half a mile. Not returning at a late hour -a delay uncommon with him the family became uneasy, and upon proceeding to the gate in order to go in search of him, they found his horse at the gate, without the rider, and one stirrup missing to in his stadle. They immedistely took the read upon which he had goneand about helf way between his own and the house of M. Faktow, they discovered his body, in which, the was utterly eviled. I believe that Mr. O'Connell and the Catholic Clergy are really sincere in their exertions to bring about tranquillity; but I fear they will find that it was much easier to rouse all the fierce passions of a wild multitude, than to allay them, when once let loose, as they are at present, over a whole country. SPAIN.

This country stands on the verge of a convulsion. Whether the decisive acts of the prevotal courts have plucked the lighted fuze from the magazine, and so averted for a time the catastrophe that impended, is yet a mystery. We know, however, that a plot of most extensive ramification has been detected. A French subject implicated has been arrested, as has Don Malecuarte, the supposed head of the conspiracy; and Migar, a bookseller, has had a private press in his cellur, and in whose house were found cor.espondence and papers connected with Malacuarto, the refugees and the members of the grand European Council of Propaganda, has been tried, condemned, and executed

The Courrier François gives the following anecdote of Ferdinand VII:-The wife of the bookseller Mijar, condemned to death, went on the day before his execution to Aranjaez, to implore his Majesty to purcon her husband. The King received her petition, and wrote in the margin, "I grant him the favor of being quartered aft r he is hung."

Is there a power to charm the soul Beneath you azure skies, d spread resistless its controul. It is the deep blue eye's!

Dread we lest beauty bid us stray Those glanges we must fly-As stars before the sun's bright my-Shot from the deep blue eye!

If there be speech to draw the tear, And speech that tear to dry; Its eloquence can ne er compare With that of her blue eye.

Is there a soul-all dead to fame-That owns not glory's sigh ! E'en this can warm that soul to flame, The burning-deep-blue eye!

Does dark despair his mantle spread, Or calumny belief Wild auguish lifts his drooping head, When pity melts that eye, -

Forvetfal hen of all its woes, The mantle and the lie, In rosy joys, the spirit flows, When beamed on by that eye

Much as I love the evening noild-Much as the southern sky, Much as the warbler of the wild-Much more that deep-blue eye! If angel forms might e'er descend,

Bright from their homes on high, No gentler beauties heav'n could send, Than hers of the azure eye! Yes! in those star-paved walks above,

Where myrinds, heav no nen fly, There ne'er can be such bliss, as love Sprung from her deep-blue eye!
