The rule of expediency is a good one—the only one, in fact, that governs the votes of hundreds of those who now support the bill.

It is rumoured that the present session will be very short, ending probably in September. The reform question is the only one of importance that will be discussed, the other great subjects of legislative investigation being very properly deferred until the assembling of a new and mere popular House of Commons. One or two minor bills, however, will be introduced. The bankrupt laws will be uncliorated, and the stampt duties, it is said, will be revived. In a spirit of gratitude, Ministers will unshackle the

All fears of the result of the discussion on the bill have long since vanished. It will be opposed, with very few exceptions, only by the nominees of boroughmongers, or the self-elected representatives of corrupt places; and these, though frightfully numerous, are, thank Heaven! too few to oppose the friends of the measure. They will, however, postpone its final accom-plishment, by protracted debates and fruitless amendments, as long as possible; but their factious obstinacy will be the more readily pardoned, since the final accomplishment of reform is Next week's debate will indicate the strength and tactics of the opposition, and therefore will be looked to with anxious cariosity.

HUNGARY.

A newspaper, that vouches for the anthenticity of the fact, states that the Hungarians have ddressed to the Emperor Francis representations friendly to the Poles. It is remarkable that this spirit of independence and liberty has manifested itself in Hungary, a country so devoted to the house of Austria, and which lately voted to it both men and war subsidies.

There exists in the heart of that nation gene ous sentiments of fraternity towards Poland. If the house of Austria has forgotten that Sobmore than once from the Ottoman scimitar.

Austria and Prussia are aware of the sym oathy felt by the people of Germany for the Poles. To counteract it, they prevent strangers from forwarding any assistance to Poland, and M. de Metternich detains as prisoners the soldiers of a neutral corps who have entered the Austrian territory. A day may come when the Germans will shake off that useless oppression, and run to defend that nation of heroes, which has saved the cause of liberty and civilization on the bank of the Vistula.

Il is a pity to see our Cabinet, disregarding the political situation of Europe, and the private embarrassment of Austria, kneeling to that power, and renouncing the advantages which might be derived from that situation for the cause of liberty and of France.
