PRINTED DAILY, BY P. DELAUP.

TUESDAY, JUNE 10.

☞ Having refused to publish an advertisement sent to us on last Friday, and which we justly considered of a libellous nature, the author has since sent us a note wherein he states that he is no longer to be considered a subscriber to our gazette. In this circumstance we have done right, as we promised at the prospectus of this paper; that is, to admit nothing in our columns that bears the least stamp of libellous personality. We again announce it, so as any longer to be importuned by those who imagine that "the liberty of the press" obliges us to receive every species of writing or advertisements.

Since more than 15 days we have been besieged by a multitude of scribbling geniuses and poetry manufacturers on a late subject which seems to engross the undivided attention of the whole city. Notwithstanding the pecuniary advantages that would probably have resulted to us, we did not hesitate to reject such frothy communications, and must earnestly request all such gentlemen who make like articles for the entertainment of the public, not to favour us with their generous preference.

New-York, May 17.

Latest Foreign News.—The packet ship Henry, capt. Barker, which arrived yesterday from Havre, has brought us our Paris papers to the 17th of April inclusive. We notice [illegible] of the most prominent articles.

Letters from Warsaw of the 20th of March, state that the Emperor of Russia, was momently expected in that city where he was to be met by another great monarch and a celebrated statesman. His Majesty's equipage had already reached Brody.

Advices from Odessa state that war is declared against the Ottoman Porte, and that the Russian army only awaits favorable weather to commence operations. The Governor of Odessa, Count Pahlen, had left that city to join the army, which he is to occupy the principalities.

FOREIGN ITEMS.

The celebrated [illegible] has been often mentioned [illegible] traveller and geographer [illegible] penetrated as [illegible] the mysterious touch of Timbuctoo, where he fell a victim to [illegible] nation, the details of which [illegible] communicated to the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres, and will be published forthwith.

(Journal des Debats.)

At the Anglesea great sessions, in last week, one trial for felony excited peculiar interest. Hugh Michael, late postmaster of Bodedern, was indicted for feloniously opening a letter sent by John Hughes to Messrs. Dugdale and Blanchard, Liverpool, containing a 5*l.* note and a 2*l.* note, which it contained. After a long trial the accused was acquitted of the crime, to the great joy of the audience or spectators in court.

Gen. Clinton, at Lisbon, has received a serious injury in his leg by a kick from a mule. The old Queen, on hearing of the accident, sent orders to have the mule purchased for herself.

Both the London and provincial journals continue to reiterate the improving state of business through the manufacturing districts of the north of England.

Nine bishops are said to be opposed to, and seven in favour of, the repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts.

The quantity of spirits distilled during the last year in England, Scotland, and Ireland, was, in England 3,451,620; Scotland, 1,242,819; Ireland, 7,281,792 gallons.

Assassination of the British Consul.—The following letter has been received, dated Belize, Feb. 29:—"You will be shocked to hear of the murder of the British Consul at Guatemala, J. O'Reilly, Esq. Revenge, and the desire of plunder, seem to have actuated the wretched culprit, a native of the Republic, and house-servant of the Consul.

The Ballet Master of the New Brunswick Theatre, London, died of grief at the destruction of the edifice.

Among the foreigners engaged in the Greek service are three captains and six lieutenants, Americans.

Expansive Force of Steam.—A circumstance lately occurred, rather of a singular nature, which strongly illustrates the powerful effects of steam. A strong stone bottle, half filled with water, and tightly corked, was placed by a servant girl in an oven, and forgotten. The water of course began to be converted into steam (by the heat of the oven,) which [illegible] the bottle, and was so expansive as to drive the oven door, which was of cast iron, from its hinges, against the kitchen wall, with such violence, that it was broken into several pieces. The oven itself, though of considerable weight, was carried from its seat, blew out both the kitchen windows, and tore down the fire-place. Several children were playing in the kitchen, but they fortunately escaped uninjured.

Fatal Duel.—A letter from a correspondent in Powhatan county, to the editors of the Richmond Whig, says—"In consequence of a misunderstanding which occurred here yesterday, between Dr. Branch T. Archer, late of your city, and Mr. Jimmy Crump, a challenge was sent Dr. Archer by the latter gentleman, and accepted by him. All attempts of mutual friends to adjust the differences, proving vain, the parties met in a grove within 120 yards of the Court House, fought at fifteen [illegible] distance, and on the first fire, Mr. Crump fell and expired in a few minutes. The Superior Court was in session at the time, and it is said the crack of the pistols was heard by the Judge on the bench. The sympathy of the public is much excited, both for the deceased, who has left a wife and 5 children, and for Dr. Archer, who thought with great reluctance and acted with the greatest moderation, making all the concessions he could with honor. Dr. Archer has been bailed."—Norfolk Herald.

RUINS OF BABYLON.

Babylon, the capital of the Assyrian empire, was situated on the Euphrates, 60 miles S. of Bagdad. It was founded by the first descendants of Noah, 2234 years B. C., greatly enlarged and embellished by Semiramis, the Assyrian queen, 1200 B. C. It was raised to the greatest magnificence and splendor by Nebuchadnezzar. It was situated on both sides of the river Euphrates, in a large [illegible] and fertile plain.

The form of the city was a complete square, surrounded by a wall 60 miles in circumference. The walls were of extraordinary thickness, being 87 feet broad and 350 feet high. They were built of brick, and cemented by a kind of bituminous earth called bitumen, which had the quality of soon becoming as hard as stone; and were surrounded on the outside by an immense ditch. These walls were accounted one of the seven wonders of the world. On each of the four sides of the square were twenty-five gates, at equal distances; and at each corner was a strong tower 10 feet higher than the walls. The city was composed of 40 great streets, each 15 miles long, and 150 feet broad, proceeding from 25 gates on each side, and crossing each other at right angles. [illegible] 900 feet broad, surrounding the whole. It was divided into 676 squares, extending 4½ furlongs on each of their sides. The inner parts of the squares were used for gardens, pleasure grounds, &c.

At the two ends of the bridge over the Euphrates, were two magnificent palaces which had a subterraneous communicating with each [illegible] means of a vault or tunnel [illegible] the river. The new or [illegible] to have been eight miles [illegible] and contained within it the famous hanging gardens. These gardens occupied a piece of ground 40 feet on every side, and consisted of large terraces, raised one above another till they equalled in height the walls of the city. The ascents from one terrace to another was by means of steps ten feet wide; and the whole pile was sustained by vast arches, built upon other arches, and strengthened on each side by a solid wall 22 feet in thickness. Within these arches were very spacious and splendid arpartments. In order to form a pavement for supporting the soil and confining the moister of the garden, large flat stones, 16 feet long, and four broad, were first of all, laid upon the top of the other arches; over these was spread a layer of reeds mixed with bitumen; upon this two rows of bricks closely cemented; and the whole covered with sheet lead, upon which the earth or mould was laid to a sufficient depth for the large trees to take firm root. In the upper terrace was a large reservoir, into which water was raised from the river by means of a species of engine, and kept there to be distributed to all parts of the garden.

Near the old palace stood the temple of Belus; and in the middle of the temple was an immense tower, 600 feet square at the base. It consisted of eight distinct piles or towers, each 75 feet high, placed one above the other, gradually decreasing toward the top like a pyramid, and rising to the height of 600 feet. The ascent to the summit was accomplished by spiral stairs, winding eight times round the whole. In the different stories were chapels, or temples, for the worship of Baal. In this temple of Belus, or, as some say, on its summit, was a golden image 40 feet in height, and equal in value to 3½ millions sterling. This tower is understood to have been the old tower of Babel, but greatly enlarged by Nebuchadnezzar. [illegible] are some of the statements [illegible] ancient authors respecting this extraordinary city. There is however considerable diversity in their descriptions, and some of the above particulars are probably greatly exaggerated.

This ancient and renowned capital of the eastern world was taken by Cyrus, B. C. 538, after which its glories rapidly decayed, till at length it became entirely desolate, according to the prediction of Isaiah: "Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah."

The extraordinary ruins of this city appear to have but little excited the notice of modern travellers, till a few years since, when they were examined by capt. Frederick, and also by Mr. Rich, the British resident at Bagdad.

The reason of these structures not being in such a state of preservation as those of Egypt, appears to be chiefly owing to the defect of the materials. Instead of the granite and porphyry, which the banks of the Nile so abundantly afforded, the Babylonians built of brick, cemented with bitumen. The walls thus formed, not only moulder from lapse of time, but being easily softened by art, they are carried away for the purpose of building elsewhere. Babylon thus became a great quarry for the construction of modern cities in its neighborhood. Yet after the depredations of many ages, its grandeur is still attested, not indeed by the most imperfect remnants of any of its former edifices, but by heaps of earth, bricks, and rubbish, piled as it were in mountain masses, and scarcely at first distinguishable from elevations raised by the hand of nature.

PANORAMA EXHIBITION.

THE great Panoramic picture of the City of Paris, the Capital of the Kingdom of France is now exhibiting in the building on the public square of Rampart street.

The view is taken from the roof of the south end of the palace of the Tuilleries; the spectator must therefore immagine himself pleaced on this elevated situation which commands an extensive prospect over the whole city.

Immediately under the eye of the spectator in a northern direction, is the roof of the King's appartments, and on the right that of the long picture gallery stretching eastward as far as the Louvre; —This gallery bounds the place de Carousel on the south side and the new gallery on the north, in the centre of this square is seen the triumphal arch. On this square Banaparte was wont to review his battalions previous to their departure for their respective destinations, and here oft the walls resounded with the clang of martial music. On the west side of the palace the spectator looks down on the Garden of the Tuileries, and beyond them to the distance is seen the palaces of the Garde du Meubles, and the woods of the Champ Elysees in the distance.

When we consider that Paris has been the theatre of so many great political events which have convulsed Europe for thirty years past, few, if any subjects of equal interest can be offered to the public.

Admittance——50 cents.
